OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

Some legislators, in the course of the debate on the dismissal of the infamous Terry assault upon the Supreme Court, took occasion to express their supreme contempt for the press, and to inveigh bitterly against all men who recognize or accede to its influence.

The contemptuous expression of these gentlemen is nothing new. It invariably results that when the press discusses public questions, some of those who differ from it take occasion to vituperate against it. And it is well, for more forcibly than anything else it testifies to the usefulness of the press. When, however, these gentlemen have the press with them, it is marvellous how exceeding gracious they are to this same "despised" influence, and how proudly they point to it as the exponent of the career of public opinion.

They fall into error if they suppose that in manifesting their utter indifference to what the press may say, they are voicing their contempt for the expression of individual writers. The press does not create or formulate public opinion—it reflects it. The average judgment of the country may be accurately ascertained from press expression taken as a whole. It reflects the opinions of the people, and to an inexpressible extent influences them.

For public opinion is a growth; it has its genesis in the thought of individual citizens, and the aggregation of this thought, taking shape and developing importance by accretion, becomes public judgment, divided, or practically unanimous, as the case may be.

The facts of daily life in public circles, as reported by the newspapers, unquestionably form the basis, in part, of the individual judgments, the aggregation of which makes what we denominate public opinion, and to a certain extent, also, the expression of journals aid in this form of opinion, just as do other private judgments. But when it is claimed that the press creates public opinion, there is set up an erroneous pretension. And it is noteworthy that this is most frequently made and with but rare exceptions, by those not connected with public journals. Seldom, indeed, does the practical journalist assert the claim. He knows it is not true, if he is well-informed and thoughtful. He knows that the newspaper reflects a shading of this thought, taking shape and developing importance by accretion, becomes public judgment, divided, or practically unanimous, as the case may be.

And the soundness of these statements and conclusions is not to be questioned. Our great dailies at the "Bay" have missed their opportunity. Some of the weekly have done better, and all of the country press that issued special numbers, so far as the exposition of California interests are concerned, clearly eclipsed them. A good many inferior papers have issued "G. A. R. editions" and in every case great credit was deserved. We do not recall one in which California, and the immediate locality where the journal is published, were not made the texts for the majority of the matter and illustration to which the reader was exposed.

For the average judgment of the country, as expressed in the modifying of public opinion, but, according to our view, of very limited importance.

For public opinion is a growth; it has its genesis in the thought of individual citizens, and the aggregation of this thought, taking shape and developing importance by accretion, becomes public judgment, divided, or practically unanimous, as the case may be.

The facts of daily life in public circles, as reported by the newspapers, unquestionably form the basis, in part, of the individual judgments, the aggregation of which makes what we denominate public opinion, and to a certain extent, also, the expression of journals aid in this form of opinion, just as do other private judgments. But when it is claimed that the press creates public opinion, there is set up an erroneous pretension. And it is noteworthy that this is most frequently made and with but rare exceptions, by those not connected with public journals. Seldom, indeed, does the practical journalist assert the claim. He knows it is not true, if he is well-informed and thoughtful. He knows that the newspaper reflects a shading of this thought, taking shape and developing importance by accretion, becomes public judgment, divided, or practically unanimous, as the case may be.

If these exasperated legislators had thought clearly, and less vituperatively, they might have confounded their expression to the truth by saying that the entertained contempt for this that or the other specific journal, and refused to recognize it as an influencing agency. No one could object to such a statement, any more than if the legislator had said that he cared nothing for the individual expression of Brown, Jones or Smith. But if Brown, Jones and Smith constitute a majority of the community in a democratic form of government, and are agreed in sentiment on a public question, we take it that the boldest of Representatives would scarcely defend the property or justify the indiscipline of contemptuous and vituperative expression concerning this democratic manifestation of the will of the governed, over whom the government properly extends its power by their free consent, and that only.

So then, when the press is contended and its agency derided in public affairs, it is the equivalent of denouncing the sentiment of the citizenship of the country, of which the press in its collective capacity is simply the exponent, nothing more. If it does not reflect public sentiment, be sure that the people will make it known, and legislators and all others will remain in no doubt concerning it.

Castilian, the man of faith and knowledge and brilliant powers, the eminent statesman and accomplished scholar, and whom few public men had broader experience with the press in his day, or clearer insight into the forces that mold public opinion, strange as it may seem, differed widely in his estimate of this channel of human intelligence from those critical gentlemen of the Legislature of California who are so contemptuous of it. He could comprehend society without steam engines, the telegraph, or a thousand other marvels modern industry has shown in the triumphal path of progress, but he could not understand a society without the immense volume of the daily press, "in which is registered by a legion of writers, who should be held in honor by the people, our troubles, our vicissitudes, our apprehensions, and the degree of perfection at which we have arrived in the work of realizing an ideal of justice upon the face of the earth."

The reading of the newspaper he looked upon as co-operative in thought by a man with the brain of all humanity; his sympathy with the hearts of his fellowmen; the mingling of his life with the great ocean of human existence; his interest in the agitation of its waves by the breath of new ideas. Further on, in his brilliant criticism, he speaks of these influences—the papers—as "exceptional witnesses who know what rays of light cross each other on our horizon. Their studied silence upon some subjects matters little, nor the injustice, even to falsehood, so often manifested; for from this battle of spiritual forces results the total life, as from the shadows we perceive the harmony of a picture." Regetting but admitting their inevitable presence, he believed we would be happier without these evils, the shadows, but "it is a fatality of the social organism that progress encounters obstacles in the great efforts designed to advance it;" "so but from the cloudy and intricate world of falsehood arises a luminous ether which forms the world of truth." Finally he exclaims: "If all the different institutions of which people are so proud were called to judgment, and if each of them showed both the good and the evil they have done, perhaps not one of them could retire from the trial as pure as the press, and none would justly merit a blessing from humanity."

GRAND ARMY NEWSPAPER EDITIONS.

The San Francisco Herald of Trade in referring to the splendid editions of some of the San Francisco papers, in honor of the visit of the Grand Army of the Republic, holds that with most of them, it was wasted opportunity." The Herald of Johnson offered the following sub-resolution:

Resolved, That in the death of Samuel J. Tilden the country has lost one of its ablest and most patriotic American citizen, one of the few who possessed the qualities of leadership and character which have left their impress upon the social and political conditions of our country.

Johnson of Sonoma offered the following sub-resolution:

LOCAL INTELLIGENCE.

Shasta to the Boys in Blue.
While it is true that California, owing to the remoteness of her situation, and the danger apprehended at the time from a disloyal element within her own borders, did not send a very large number of soldiers to help fight the battles of the Union, and while, in consequence, she is not prepared to make any considerable showing of Grand Army veterans, her citizens can point with pride to her splendid record in connection with the several relief organizations which participated in the cause of the soldiers at the front. There is scarcely a county in the State that did not respond liberally to the calls for aid during the trying years of the war. A generation of this city, who were at that time the热血 of Shasta, sends up the following figures showing the contributions forwarded from that county. These contributions were made through the Patriotic Fund, Relief of Societies, To the Boys in Blue, Red Cross, February 13, 1863, $1,951. Christian Commission, January 4, 1865, $60,500; February 24, $105,87; March 7th, $104,37; May 8th, $4,25; June 14th, $8,000; Sanitary Commission, November 11, 1864, $1,000; November 15th, $13,80; December 1st, $2,20; January 4, 1865, $70; February 24, $111,37; March 7th, $123,37; May 8th, $71; June 14th, $1,000; Total contributions $100,000. Total contributions from the Grand Army veterans now visiting the coast doubles itself with gratitude to the sum of $200,000 of money and supplies sent them by the patriotic citizens of California while they were doing battle in the face of the enemy.

Arrest.

The Police Court yesterday morning a colored man named J. M. Johnson was arraigned on a charge of battery, preferred by Louis Warner, alias "Muldon." The difficulty occurred a few nights ago at a saloon on the corner of Second and K streets. Johnson, who was subject to the charge, and then witnesses were put on to show how bad the case was. Warner swore that Johnson struck him in the nose, while he was quietly conversing with other persons. Johnson denied it, and knew of a somewhat different version of the matter. The defendant made a statement to the effect that he had a few words with Warner, and the latter applied his fist to him before he was hit. A fight ensued. The general evidence showed that it was a lively rough and tumble around the saloon, the barkeep moving the chairs out of the way to make room for the disputants to argue. Finally they got in behind the bar and lay upon the floor in close tussle for about five minutes making no more noise than a couple of bulls and more noise than a dozen men. The barkeep, in the course of the scuffle, directed an annual levy of the 55 cent per cent, until the debt was paid. After this the bonds rapidly rose in value, until now they were worth 50 cents.

So Mr. Pittman, with his reputation and with Beaty with his one per cent tax, raised the price of bonds three cents. Brown, with his litigation, raised them four cents. I yield the palm to the Mayor.

H. O. BEATTY.
